οἱ ἱερεῖς [?] hoi hierē[is?] (l. 11) - the plural nominative hoi hierēis may perhaps refer to members of the koinon.

ἱερεύς, hierēus (l. 10)

The office of the secretary is largely restored in line 2 and the reading should thus be accepted with some reservation: [?γραμματεύς]γτος, [grammateuo]ntos

VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

ii. Realty

εἰς τὸ χωρίον, eis to chorion, l. 7: it probably refers to the cult place in the countryside (SEG 46: 1547).

XII. NOTES

i. Comments

The term koinon is attested in line 3. Riel (1997: 48 no. 9) restores this term in line 1 too, claiming, with some reservation though, that this decree emanates from a koinon of Asklepios worshippers ([? ἔδοξε τῷ κοινῷ] τοῦ Ἀσκληπιοῦ, [edoxe to koino] tou Asklepiou). However, the first editor, Schwertheim (1996), was in favour of restoring the title of a magistrate in line 1, whereas the editor of the entry in SEG 46: 1547 (Pleket) wonders whether the formula koinon + name of the deity in genitive is common at all.

Whereas Schwertheim (1996) identifies the koinon in line 3 with the Ilian koinon, Riel suggests that it refers to the issuing body of the decree and it is a koinon of Asklepios worshippers which sells the priesthood of Asklepios.

Although the text is partly preserved, it clearly regulates the sale of Asklepios priesthood by to koinon.

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association

Certain

Note

Despite the text's fragmentary state of preservation, the sale of the priesthood by the koinon can be considered sufficient evidence for a private association, especially if one considers that this sort of documents (sale of priesthood) was common among private association (e.g. sale of the eponymia of Sarapis by the Sarapiastai on Thasos, CAP Inv.17).
