VII. ORGANIZATION

ii. Leadership	Diokles might have been the leader of the basilistai as the dedication is made jointly by him and the basilistai . This suggestion can now be further corroborated by the recently published inscription from Limyra in Lycia (see CAPInv. 1657).

iv. Status	By analogy to associations of basilistai in Egypt and in Limyra in Lycia (CAPInv. 1657) where members had an affiliation to the army (Wörrle 2015), it can be inferred that in Thera the association was likewise composed of members of the garrison stationed there (Hiller von Gaertringen 1903: 97; Launey 1987: 1023-1031; Bagnall 1976: 129).

XII. NOTES

i. Comments	Hiller (Thera III: 85) proposed a date for the sanctuary of the Egyptian gods either to the reign of Ptolemy I or Ptolemy II. A date to the reign of Ptolemy I should, however, be ruled out for the following reasons: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Ptolemaic control of the Aegean dates to the reign of Ptolemy II. - it was during the reign of Ptolemy II that the ruler cult was introduced. On grounds of the letterforms the inscription dates to the 3rd c. BC. The earliest inscription that attests to the Ptolemaic garrison dates to 265 BC and this could constitute a terminus post quem for the presence of the basilistai in Thera. A date to the second half of the 3rd c. BC on the basis of the letterforms and in light of the newly discovered inscription from Limyra (CAPInv. 1657) seems more likely. The basilistai, as their name indicates, performed cultic activities for the Ptolemies in the sanctuary of the Egyptian gods. In this way, the sanctuary of the Egyptian gods emerges as a focal point of cultic activity, while the basilistai were the agents in fostering the ruler cult and cults strongly connected to the Ptolemaic kingdom. (see also Bommas 2005: 44; Pfeiffer 2008: 401-2) The name Diokles, the leader of the group, is also attested twice in the stele containing the letter of Philometor to Apollonios, the commander of Thera: IG XII.3 327 ll. 114, 160, but this inscription dates to the reign of Ptolemy VI Philometor and it is probably an homonym, rather than the same individual.

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association	Probable Note The group had a collective identity, as indicated by its name (basilistai). The name conveyed the group's loyalty to the Ptolemaic royal house. Groups of basilistai are attested in Ptolemaic Egypt and in territories under Ptolemaic influence/ control. In light of this it is reasonable to suggest that the group in Thera was comprised of members of the Ptolemaic garrison that formed an association devoted to the cult of the sovereigns. The internal structure and durability of this group remains, however, unclear.
