XI. INTERACTION

i. Local interaction	There is enough evidence in the territory for the cult of Asklepios to belief that he was an important divinity. A phyle called Asklepias is known from topoi-inscriptions in the stadion of Saittai (TAM V.1 74; SEG 40: 1063). A priest of the god is also attested in this city (TAM V.1 148); for other evidences of his worship in the near villages of Tabala, Kula and Kollyda cf. TAM V.1 203, 245, 336. There is nevertheless no information about local interaction of the association with other institutions related to the Asklepios cult in the region.
-----------------------------	---

XII. NOTES

i. Comments	For the meaning of neotera as a "younger, maybe reformed association" (in opposition to the older epichoric name hieros doumos) cf. Poland 1931: 1078, and parallel evidences in Ibid. 1908: 171f. Cf. the similar interpretation of Herrmann 1962: 43 as meaning "ein jüngerer, späten gegründeter Verein". For similar qualifications in Lydia cf. TAM V.1 92, ll. 2-3: ἡ σύνοδος τῶν νεῶν ποδαρίων (he synodos ton neon podarion); TAM V.1 451, ll. 1-3: ἡ νεωτέρα φράτρα τοῦ Ἀσκληπιοῦ (he neotera phratra tou Asklepiou); TAM V.1 537, l. 1: ἱερὰ συμβίωσις καὶ νεωτέρα (hiera symbiosis kai neotera); TAM V.3 1556, l. 3: νέοι φιλάνπελοι (neoi philanpeloi). The phratra is an association originally kinship-related (cf. Buresch 1898: 13), though some cultic or professional associations seems to be called phratra in Roman imperial Lydia. On the possible sense of phratra as symbiosis in Asia Minor cf. Herrmann 1962: 42f. and n. 157, with reference to Artemidoros Daldianos (IV 44 and V 82).

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association Note	Probable It is probable that the association is a private one if the association is cultic, as indicated by the name. Although, in the near Saittai, one of the official phylai had the same theophoric name.
