V. SOURCES

i. Source(s)	I.Thrac.Aeg. E18 (iii AD)
Note	See also: Jaccottet II no. 35; GRA I 83; AGRW 60
Online Resources	I.Thrac.Aeg. E18 and AGRW ID# 2554
i.a. Source type(s)	Epigraphic source(s)
i.b. Document(s) typology & language/script	Dedication in Greek of the archiboukolos Gaius Cassius Sextus to Dionysos and the synmystai .
i.c. Physical format(s)	Monolithic limestone pediment (h. 0.43 and l. 0.81 at its base), with one central and two small side acroteria. The inscription was engraved in the pediment's tympanon.
ii. Source(s) provenance	Seen in 1937 by Bousquet at the basement of a private house at the village of Bouloustra (modern village of Abdera, appr. 5 km to the N of the archaeological site). According to the owners of the house, the stone originated from the acropolis of ancient Abdera. No recorded autopsy since then; present whereabouts unknown.

VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

i. Archaeological remains	The acropolis of Hellenistic and Roman Abdera is located on Polystylon Hill; no important architectural remains of these periods have as yet been reported there.
ii. References to buildings/objects	The text mentions a μάγαρον, magaron. The physical format of the stone on which the inscription is engraved (small pediment, see above section V.i.c) indicate an entrance to a small structure; but the actual architectural form of the structure itself evades us. In the past, scholars have suggested a Dionysiac grotto (Nilsson 1957: 53, no. 47), a grotto or a small chapel (Bousquet 1938: 53). But modern references are more generic and refer to a place that, regardless of its physical appearance, served the cultic activities of the association; thus Nigdelis 2006: 132-3: a place of sacrifice and possibly of initiation ceremonies; GRA I 83: 'it could be translated "sanctuary", "shrine" or "grotto", but its sense is clearly indicative of a meeting place, most likely for rituals'; Jaccottet 2003: 73-4: 'le terme ne contient aucune obligation architecturale... cette structure devait servir de lieu d'initiation'.

VII. ORGANIZATION

ii. Leadership	ἀρχιβούκολος, archiboukolos (ll. 3-4: Γ(άιος) Κάσσιος Σέξτος, G(aios) Kassios Sextos). According to GRA I 83 (following Bousquet 1938: 54, no. 2) the fact that the archiboukolos refers to the other members of the association as synmystai and not as boukoloι may indicate a superior category of initiate and not a leadership role. Jaccottet 2003: 73 also notes that the reference to mystai and not to boukoloι may indicate that the title has gradually lost its original functional meaning.
iii. Members	συνμύσται, synmystai , l. symmystai (l. 5)

VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

ii. Realty	The association possessed a μάγαρον, magaron (l. 6).
------------	---

IX. MEMBERSHIP

iv. Status	The only person named was a Roman citizen.
------------	--

X. ACTIVITIES

iii. Worship	The existence of a μάγαρον, magaron , indicates cultic activities, see above section VI.ii.
--------------	--

XII. NOTES

i. Comments	No name and no descriptive term occur in the text. But references to an ἀρχιβούκολος, archiboukolos (l. 4), to a μάγαρον, magaron (l. 6), and to συνμύσται, synmystai (l. 5), point to the cult of Dionysos.
