i. Comments	The deceased Iason, for whom the funerary epigram was composed, is called Παιήωνος ἑταῖρος, Paieonos hetairos (II. 1-2) by his hetaroi . Paieon or Paian or Paion is a healing deity attested in Iliad E 401, 899. Later Paian becomes a surname of Asclepius and is identified with Apollo. Παιήωνος ἑταῖρος, Paieonos hetairos, was thus either a physician or a poet or a scholar, as the IG-editor, Fraenkel, suggests; he does not even exclude the identification of Iason with a namesake who was according to Suidas ᾿Αργεῖος ἱστορικός, νεώτερος Πλουτάρχου τοῦ Χαιρωνέως, γραμματικός, ἔγραψε περὶ τῆς Ἑλλάδος βιβλία δ΄, Argeios historikos neoteros Ploutarchou tou Chaironeos, grammatikos, egrapse peri tes Hellados biblia 4. Although the homeric words used in the epigram, such as ἀκηχ<έ>μενοι, akech<ε>menoi (i.e. grieving, mourning), and the phrase κλέος δ΄ ἀνὰ γαῖαν Ἁχαιῶν, kleos d' ana gaian Achaion, do not exclude his scholarly engagements, the identification should be treated with caution. Wilhelm 1905: 413, regards the deceased as a doctor. The hetaroi are thus in any case to be understood as a professional group.

i. Private association	Possible
Note	The hetaroi were apparently a professional group. The metrical text and the poetic expressions offer however no indication, whether they were organised as an association.
