i.b.	Document(s) typology & language/script	Honorific decree in greek of the council and the assembly of Kyzikos in honor of Kleidike, daughter of Asklepiades, priestess of Meter Plakiane and deputy-priestess of Artemis Mounichia. Kleidike was honored with a bronze statue by female priestly officials (αἱ συντελοῦσαι τοὺς κόσμους παρὰ τῆ Μητρὶ τῆ Πλακιανῆ καὶ αἱ προσαγορευόμεναι θαλάσσιαι καὶ συνοῦσαι μετ'αυτῶν ἱέρειαι, hai syntelousai tous kosmous para tei mEtri tei Plakianei hai prosagoreuomenai Thalassiai kai Synousai met'auton hiereiai). The initiative for the decree was taken by Apollonios son of Apollophanes who approached the council and the assembly on behalf of the female priestly officials. The council and the assembly gave their consent to the request and gave permission to the female priestly officials to set up a bronze statue of Kleidike in the agora andreia where Kleidikes' family monument stood.

VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

ii. References to buildings/objects	εἰκόνα χαλκῆν, eikona chalken (l. 5)
-------------------------------------	--------------------------------------	--

iv. Endowments	Kleidike requested 700 stateras to the female priestly officials with the purpose to hold sacrifices in the synodos on the 5th day of the month Taureon (Il. 12-14).

ii.	Gender	Women
	Note	All priestly officials are women.
iv.	Status	In light of the priestly offices, these female officials should come form well-off families.

i.	Assemblies	The priestly officials came together to a σύνοδος, synodos (l. 13) on the 5th day of Taureon during which they held sacrifices (ἱερὰ, hiera , l. 13).
iv.	Honours/Other activities	Female priestly officials honored Kleidike, priest of Meter ek Plakias and deputy priestess of Artemis Mounichia with a bronze statue. The statue was to be set up in the family monument of Kleidike, called synedrion (i.e. an exedra) to the west of the statue of her brother. The synedrion was located in the agoran andreian (l. 6).

XI INTERACTION

i. Local interaction

The female priestly officials interacted with the civic authorities of Kyzikos through an intermediary, Aristandros son of Apollophanes, the speaker of the decree (this person was the brother of the speaker of another decree in honor of Kleidike: IMT Kyz Kapu Dağ 1433; for the family of the speaker see Habicht 2005: 94-95).

i. Comments	Although the collective names point to three distinct female priestly groups in that they assumed disparate duties, they are treated all three together for the following reasons: - they honour Kleidike collectively, presenting themselves in front of the assembly to request permission for erecting a bronze statue in her honor in a public space. - Kleidike promised and made a donation of 700 stateras to them all for the sacrifices they made in the synodos on the 5th day of Taureon (Il. 12-14). There was only one recipient of Kleidike's donation and not three distinct recipients. They acted collectively once a year in the synodos on the 5th day of Taureon; there they all gathered together and performed sacrifices funded thanks to Kleidike's donation.
	Whereas different boards of priestesses honored Kleidike with a bronze statue set up in the agora andreia, a board of male officials (kosmophylakesantes) set up a painted portrait of Kleidine in the parthenon

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association

Possible

Note

Three different boards of female priestly officials honored Kleidike. Although they do not possess a common collective name, they are involved in a collective action, that is the dedication of Kleidike's statue. Of course, this does not qualify them as an organized group. However, Kleidike's endowment of 700 stateres for sacrifices to be performed in the synodos on the 5th day of Taureon allowed these priestly officials to come together for a specific purpose: to hold sacrifices during the meeting/ festival (synodos). This inscription seems to provide evidence for an association in the making.
