i. Private association	Possible
Note	The deceased was member of the phratra Chaironis . In creating this entry, I followed Seyfarth (1955) who considers the term phratra for Roman Asia Minor as standing for a private association and not for a civic subdivision. However, I have some reservations as to Seyfarth's suggestion with regard to this specific inscription. The date of the inscription is unknown. Unlike other funerary stelai where the phratra appears as the body setting up the gravestone, in this particular case the deceased is designated as belonging to the phratra Chaironis . In one of the decrees for Archippe, the great benefactress of late Hellenistic Kyme, two men who were appointed to administer Archippe's affairs after her death belonged to the phratra Aristarchidos LKyme 13 VIII 1. 39). In the light of this, I would be inclined to consider phratra Chaironis as a civic subdivision of Kyme, though I cannot rule out the possibility that we may be dealing with a private association. The evidence at hand is inconclusive.
