VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

|--------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| iii. Income | The association presumably received money from its benefactors (honored in I.Eph(esos) 3055 and I.Eph(esos) 3070). In addition, it is mentioned in the sarcophagus of the baker Aurelius Nikon (I.Eph(esos) 2226): If someone violates his grave, the philobedioi shall receive parts of the fine. |

X. ACTIVITIES

| iv. Honours/Other activities | The association honors, at different points in time, two important officials (apart from other offices, both were asiarches ): I.Eph(esos) 3055 and I.Eph(esos) 3070. In both cases, a personal relation existed, as the honored persons are called προστάτης , prostates (I.Eph(esos) 3055, l. 13) or εὐεργέτης , euergetes (I.Eph(esos) 3070, l. 18) of the association. |

XII. NOTES

| i. Comments       | Groups of philoploi are normally explained as lovers of gladiatorial games. This group additionally stressed its loyalty towards the Vedii. As this important Ephesian family moved to Rome at the very end of the 2nd century (Kirbihler 2011), it is noteworthy that the group still used the name in the 3rd century (I.Eph(esos) 3070) - the fame acquired by the Flavii Vedii through integration into the Roman senate may explain this. |
