VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

i. Archaeological remains

The gymnasium at Pergamon lies near the Sanctuary of Hera on the south slopes of the Acropolis. Built probably in the reign of Eumenes II (197-159 BC) it extended over three terraces, encompassing an area of more than 20,000 sqm.

iii. Members	μετέχοντες, metechontes (bc, 11. 7-8)
iv. Officials	γραμματεύς, grammateus, d ll. 5-7
	In d II. 5 and 7 the grammateus is further specific as $\tau \delta \beta'$, to b, a phrase that could indicate that the office of the grammateus was annual and the current grammateus was holding his second tenure office.
	The participle $ἐπι]μεληθέντων$, epimelethenton (d l. 4) may refer to past epimeletes in office but it may also refer to ad hoc officials assuming specific duties. Due to the fragmentary state of preservation the precise nature of the epimeletai cannot be elucidated any further.
vi. Laws and rules	Fragments be of the stele (be II. 1-15) list the admission criteria for new members, which seems to fa into different categories. As the stele is mutilated, only a part of the admission critera has been preserved. All categories underwent a δοκιμασία, dokimasia (be II. 4, 8), yet what seems to differ are the admission criteria as well as the entrance fee (εἰσηλόσιον, eiselysion, be II. 8-9): - If more than one candidates are competing for one place, then the issue should be settled by vo (διαψηφοφορεῖσθαι, diapsephophoreisthai, be II. 6-7). - If the father has been a member for at least five years, then his son must pay 50 denaria (be II. 7-10). - If the son enter at the same time as the father or if the father is a member for less than five years, the the son must pay the fee of non-members, namely a fee paid by those whose father was not a memb (bc, II. 10-14). According to Hepding (1907: 295) this rule is attested for the first time in this inscription
	On an occasion, which cannot be determined due to the nature of the evidence, two thirds of member must be present (bc ll. 3-4).

VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

i. Treasury/Funds Members paid an entrance fee (see VII.vi)

ii	Gender	Men
	Note	See below IX.iii
ii	. Age	Children Adults

Note	The text refers to fathers (pateres , bc II. 9, 10, 11, 13) and sons (νίοὶ, hyioi , bc II. 7). The age of the sons is further determined in line 11 as π αιδέες, paides .
v. Relations	In light of the terminology used to define the members, kinship relations are apparent (see above IX.iii)

ii. Meetings and events	The group would convene to carry out the dokimasia (examination) of new members.

i.	Comments	The term systema normally designates the gerousia in Greek cities (Poland 1909: 158; Giannakopoulos 2008).
iii.	Bibliography	Giannakopoulos, N. (2008), Ο θεσμός της γερουσίας των ελληνικών πόλεων κατά τους ρωμαϊκούς χρόνους. Οργάνωση και λειτουργίες. Thessalonike. Hepding, H. (1907), 'Die Inschriften. Die Arbeiten zu Pergamon 1904-1905', MDAI (A) 32: 241-377.

i. Private association	Possible
Note	Although the name of the group is not preserved, the admission criteria and the internal hierarchy (e.g. grammateus) point to a formally organized body. What seems to pose some problems is the identification of the group with corporate bodies that present a similar organization and structure. Hepding (1907: 294-5), taking into account the findspot of the inscription (gymnasium of Pergamon) and the absence of any mention to the neoi, argued that this text should be linked to the gerousia of Pergamon, something than can be further supported by the attestation of the terms synedrion and systema in the text. Both terms can designate the gerousia (Giannakopoulos 2008). If the text sets out the admission criteria for the Pergamene gerousia centered around the gymnasium, then we are dealing with an official body of the city of Pergamon and not with a private association.
