VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

ii. References to buildings/objects

It seems that the phrase τῶν ἐν Πανακείᾳ (ton en Panakeiai, ll. 2-3) defines a place connected with the activity of the group of Asklapiastai. There is further a possibility that we are dealing with a mistake of the stone-cutter: Thrämer (1897-1902: 1487-8) suggests the reading ΠΑΝΑΚΕΙΑΣ, PANAKEIAS; the editor of IG IV, M. Fraenkel, in his commentary of IG IV 1450, suggested the emendation EN ΠΑΝΑΚΕΙΩΙ, EN PANAKEIOI. The latter is accepted by Poland (1909: 86): "Das Heiligtum wird auch in Epidauros als eine Stätte von Asklepiasten genannt, offenbar zum Unterschiede von zahlreichen ähnlichen Kollegien im Mittelpunkte dieses Epidauros beherrschenden Kultus"; and p. 209 "Bedeutsam ist es, daß auch dort, wo der Asklepioskult den Mittelpunkt des Staatskultus bildet, noch kleinere Kreise den Gott ihrerseits verehren. So hat es vermutlich in Epidauros eine ganze Anzahl solcher Genossenschaften gegeben, da bei einer von ihnen eine lokale Bestimmung zur Unterscheidung beigelegt ist".

We have however no idea which specific place within the sanctuary of Epidauros the Panakeion or Panakeia was. Brown Stewart (2009: 175-6) suggests that the so-called skana "resembles a class of buildings that are suited to the particular needs of small, associative groups". However, she does not attribute skana to an organized association, as she believes the Asklapiastai were, but inclines to the view that the building "...may have been used by a less formally organized group, in this case, the cultic personnel" (p. 176).

For the worship of Panakeia cf. IG IV².1 388.

X. ACTIVITIES

iv. Honours/Other activities

The synodos honours T. Statilius Lamprias, son of Teimokrates

XI. INTERACTION

i. Local interaction

The fact that the Asklapiastai honour one of the most important personalities of public life with connections also with Sparta and Athens (see XII.i: Comments), shows that they had some important relations within the local community.

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association

Certain

Note

It seems that the Asklapiastai are an association which is connected with a civic cult, but it is a specific group of worshippers designated by the place where they used to gather. Although no further information regarding their organization is preserved, their closer specification as a sub-group, their concrete place of reference and the fact that they collectively honour an important person of public life indicate that they were an organized association.

ii. Historical authenticity

The epigraphic evidence renders the historical authenticity of the association indisputable.
