|------------------------------|---|
| iv. Honours/Other activities | The phyle of the eriourgoi honours Aurelios Hermippos, xystarches, priest of Artemis, a famous man, lover of his fatherland and first in everything, famous and generous archiereus, organiser of a dog competition, protarches and holder, together with his sons, of many other charges and liturgies. He has given to the city 50,000 denares for wheat and 10000 to build a sun-protection for the theatre, and has given 500,000 denares for wheat, 50,000 for the boule, 10,000 for the gerousia and 1000 for each of the seven phylai, that have erected the statues. He is evergetes of the city and of the phyle of the woolworkers. On the importance of honorific inscriptions set up by private associations in order to commemorate the relationships that they maintained with the leading members of society cf. van Nijf 1997: 73f. |
|------------------------------|---|

XI. INTERACTION

| | |
|----------------------|---|
| i. Local interaction | The phyle, and that means the association too, has honoured a very important public officer and benefactor of the city also as its own benefactor. The existence of guild tribes evidences the social and economic importance of these guilds in Philadelphiea and also in the Lydian Saittai (Dittmann-Schöne, III.3.11) By setting up honorific inscriptions and statues on behalf of honorands chose by the boule and the gerousia, the associations appear as an executive branch of the city's political structure, as stated by van Nijf 1997: 184. For the local interaction and political significance of the craftsmen associations in Lydia cf. van Nijf 1997: 184f., 233. |
