VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

i. Archaeological remains	On the summit of Mt Kynthos is a small plateau. A precinct wall demarcates the sanctuary of Zeus Kynthios and Athena Kynthia. The sanctuary is mentioned in the Delian inventories of the third and second centuries BC. A Doric tetrastyle propylon lies on the western side of the precinct and gives access to a terrace. Two oikoi flank the northern side of the terrace. Two terraces flanking the eastern side (J and K in GD 105) were leveled out after 167 BC. A mosaic floor with the inscription commemorating the dedication of the kataklyston (ID 2420) was laid out in terrace K. To the east of the mosaic floor stood probably the colossal bronze statue of Ptolemy IX Soter II (ID 1532). For a summary of the remains of the sanctuary see GD 105 as well as Roussel 1987: 223-8.
ii. References to buildings/objects	κατάκλυστον, kataklyston (ll. 4-5): washable pavement (Hellmann 1992: 193). The term kataklyston seems to designate the mosaic itself. For the various interpretations of this term that incited a fervent debate among two French scholars see Hellmann (1992: 193-4).

XII. NOTES

i. Comments

Rousset (1987: 94 n. 3) wonders whether the hetairoi of the inscription should be considered members of an association.

Baslez (2001: 244) appears more assertive in thinking that the hetairoi attested in the dedication formed an association centered in the Kynthion.

It should be noted that the formula of the dedicatory inscription strongly resembles the dedications made in the sanctuary of the Syrian goddess; dedicatory formula of ὑπέρ + genitive. In the sanctuary of the Syrian goddess dedications are normally made on behalf of one's children, wife, and/ or the civic communities of the island, the Athenians and the Romans, thus paying respect to members of close family and the political authority.

ID 2420 is made on behalf of the dedicator himself and the hetairoi. The term hetairoi is attested twice in Delian funerary inscriptions (EAD 30: 143; 348), which however do not reveal much about the identity of the hetairoi besides a close relationship between the deceased and those setting up the funerary stele. In the case of the dedicatory inscription from the Kynthion one could envisage that strong ties of friendship or companionship bonded the dedicator to the hetairoi but it remains unclear whether the hetairoi constituted a formally organized private association.

The priest and zakoros constitute the personnel of the official cult of Zeus Kynthios and Athena Kynthia. Something similar may apply to the epimeletes Kointos, who is otherwise unattested among the Athenian epimeletai of Delos.
