XII. NOTES

i. Comments	Dörner (1952: 19) dated I.Prusias 63 to the 2nd century AD based on the form of the letters. The finding spot of the inscriptions indicates that the term geitniasis here refers to an urban neighbourhood association (on such associations see Poland 1909: 85; cf. Van Nijf 1997: 181-182 with further bibliography; Pont 2013). Our geitniasis 's particular devotion to Zeus Soter has been interpreted as a possible indication that the neighbourhood hosted a temple of that deity (see Ameling in I.Prusias 63, p. 64-65). In this respect, the geitniasis possibly functioned as a neighbourhood group heavily engaged in cultic activities (cf. Fernoux 2004: 517).

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association	Possible
Note	There is a debate among scholars as to whether such neighborhood associations were privately organised groups or officially recognized subdivisions of the urban population (see Van Nijf 1997: 181-2 and Pont 2013). Nothing in these three inscriptions may be considered as a decisive argument in favour of either of these two theses. The fact that the first dedication was made on behalf of the polis is perhaps an indication of official status but it may be equally interpreted as an attempt of a private association to claim a distinguished position in the public sphere by presenting itself as a party mediating between the city and one of its important gods.
