ii. References to buildings/objects	ἐλαιος, elaios : ll. 16, 79-80,

VII. ORGANIZATION

iii. Members

There is no mention of the terminology used to indicate the regular members. However, guests are recorded: οἱ κεχρικότες ξένοι, hoi kechrikotes xenoí (ll. 62-63). The xenoí are required to pay a certain amount, presumably for the oil that they were using to anoint themselves, which was provided free of charge (or included in the monthly fees) for regular members.

VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

i. Treasury/Funds

Mention of [ἐ]πίκοινα χρήματα epikoina chremata (l. 85). The association clearly had a treasury from which funds were lent to the members and to which loans were repaid (the interest applied is at a rate of 2% in the present text). Ledgers and accounts were drawn up and kept.

iii. Income

The association had an income presumably through regular fees as well as from the monthly interest (at a rate of 2%) arising for the lending activity which the association undertook. In the six-month period (Phamenoth-Mesore = April/May - September/October 180 BC) recorded in the text the association levied ca. 2,342 drachmae of interest from its loans in money (the total of which seems to have been 3 talents and 9,100 drachmae). The association also received income in kind, specifically in oil, as contributions in oil are registered and clearly expressed in the text (ll. 78-79ff.: π[ρᾶ]ξον δὲ καὶ τοὺς ὀφε[ί]λονταις ἐλαίῳ[v], praxon de kai tous opheilontas elaion): the total of oil received in kind by the association sums to more than 11 hydriai and 32 kotylai (more than 90 litres).

IX. MEMBERSHIP

i. Number

At least eighteen names of (presumably) members are recorded in the accounts. Lacunae in the text may hide a higher number of members. In fact, not all the members of the association may have been included in the ledger as some may have not received loans or were in a position of debtors of oil towards the association.

ii. Gender

Men

Note

All the name of those from which money or other contributions were exacted are men. Mention of a funerary banquet for the sister of a certain Hestieios (= Hestiaios) in ll. 68-69 does not imply that women were also members, but rather indicates that the association held a funerary banquet in her honour because of Hestiaios being a member (presumably).

X. ACTIVITIES

ii. Meetings and events	The association met to celebrate banquets in honour of deceased members or of member's close relatives, as a funerary banquet in honour of a member's sister is mentioned in ll. 68-69: περ[ι]δείπνου τῆς Ἑστειῶ[υ] ἀδελφῆς, perideipnou tes Hestieiou (= Hestiaiou) adelphes.
iv. Honours/Other activities	Given the presence of contributions in oil (ll. 78-79 ff.) and the mention of hoi kechrikotes xenoí (ll. 62-63), the members (and guests) of the association anointed themselves: it is possible to envisage that the anointment took place in the larger frame of gymnastic or bathing activities.

XII. NOTES

i. Comments	On the back of the ledger (verso) there is a calendar with a scheme of lunar months and mention of deities (Hermes, Demeter, and Hephaestus): it may refer to a calendar of festivals, which were celebrated by the association.

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association	Certain
Note	The mention of common funds, of an organised system of accountancy, of contributions in money and kind, of a division between regular members and 'guests' makes it certain that the group was formally organised and functioned as a private association. The fact that the account records contributions in oil and the anointment of members and guests makes it very likely that we are dealing here with the accounts of a gymnasium (which however in Ptolemaic village society operated as a private association) or of an association based in a local gymnasium.
