IV. NAME AND TERMINOLOGY

ii. Name elements	Other:	synklites : Used for the members in all sources for the religious association of Theos Hypsistos in Thessalonike, the term may well have religious overtones, but it is not entirely necessary to go beyond what the term actually says: the members were table companions.

i.c. Physical format(s)	IG X.2.1 68-70 are columns; IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054 is a building block.
ii. Source(s) provenance	IG X.2.1 68-70 were found near the Serapeum and IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054 at the agora of Thessalonike.

VI. BUILT AND VISUAL SPACE

i. Archaeological remains	Three of the inscriptions related to the association (IG X.2.1 68-70) were inscribed on columns, obviously of a sacred precinct of Theos Hypsistos , at or near the Serapeum of Thessaloniki. The columns, along with their epikrana and their speirai were paid for by Herennia Prokla in AD 66/7 (IG X.2.1 70).
ii. References to buildings/objects	The building inscription IG X.2.1 70 records the building “for the synklitai” of a colonnade by Herennia Prokla (who thus fulfilled her dead father's promise); this is the colonnade on which this inscription and IG X.2.1 68-69 were inscribed. Amyntas son of Zoilos dedicated to Theos Hypsistos and the synklitai an elaborate handle (χειρολάβή, cheirolabe) for a sacred vessel (κατάχρσις, katachysis) (IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054, ll. 3-4).

VII. ORGANIZATION

ii. Leadership	A τρικλείναρχος, trikleinarchos (IG X.2.1 68, l. 7 and 69, l. 1-2) led the association of the synklitai .
iii. Members	The members are called συνκλίται, synklitai , “table companions”, in all relevant sources (IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054, IG X.2.1 68-70).
iv. Officials	A γραμματεὺς, grammateus (IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054, l. 3: γραμματεύσας, grammateusas) is the only certain official known to us apart from the trikleinarchos. The ἱερεὺς, hiereus used for dating purposes in IG X.2.1, 67 may have been a priest of the cult of Theos Hypsistos and not of the association (if the two were actually distinct structures), or even a priest of the Egyptian Gods, if the sacred precinct of Theos Hypsistos was located within the compounds of the Serapeum, in which case the priest of the Egyptian Gods would have to give permission for this dedication to have been set up (cf. SEG 30: 622).

VIII. PROPERTY AND POSSESSIONS

ii. Realty	The colonnade erected by Herennia Prokla (IG X.2.1 70) did not necessarily belong to the association.

IX. MEMBERSHIP

i. Number	IG X.2.1 68 records the names of 38 members, including the trikleinarchos. IG X.2.1 69 (which is a slightly later catalogue) records the names of 43 members, including the trikleinarchos and his son. Thirteen members are attested in both catalogues. From all the relevant sources, 63 distinct members of the association over time are known to us (Nigdelis 2006: 173).
ii. Gender Note	Men All 63 members of the association known to us were men; the exception of Herennia Prokla, donor of the colonnade of the god's sacred precinct (IG X.2.1 70), may be more apparent than real: Herennia Prokla explicitly states that she was fulfilling her father's promise, and thus need not be a member of the association herself.
iv. Status	The names of the 63 members of the association known to us have been studied by Nigdelis 2010: 173-6. The majority of the 63 members (39) were Roman citizens. Several of the members appear to be the offspring (or the liberated slaves) of Italian merchants originally settled in Delos. Several others were Greeks who received the Roman citizenship by emperors or Roman dignitaries. There are several names pointing to origins or connections abroad. Many of those bearing Roman names were liberated slaves, judging by their cognomina. Finally, the rarity of traditional Macedonian names or cognomina is noteworthy. It should also be noted that earlier views that the cult of Theos Hypsistos had Jewish origins should be firmly rejected, at least in the case of the Thessalonican cult, given the complete absence of Semitic names. Direct evidence for a commercial background is offered by IG X.2.1 67 (the dedicant offered his dedication after having survived great danger at sea). The fact that one of the members bears the ethnic of Thessalonike (IG X.2.1 68, l. 28) need not imply that all other members were foreigners, but only that this particular member had only recently received the Thessalonican citizenship (Nigdelis 2006: 175). The general picture is one of a cosmopolitan club, with many foreigners, who may have only recently settled in the city, and many persons related to the world of commerce (despite the servile origin of some of them).
v. Relations	The two leaders of the association known to us by the two catalogues (IG X.2.1 68 and 69) were father and son.

X. ACTIVITIES

iii. Worship	The only thing we know of the religious practices of the association was that some sort of libation was performed by a sacred vessel (IG X.2.1 Suppl. 1054). The very term used for the members, synklitai, “table companions” also points to communal drinking and eating. One should not, however, overemphasize the religious character of such communal banquets, the social nature of which may have been at least equally important. Given the various dedications, the group worshiped Zeus Hypsistos (for the various views on the nature of this deity, see Nigdelis 2006: 171-77 and Belayche 2011 with earlier literature).
Deities worshipped	Theos Hypsistos

XII. NOTES

i. Comments	For three other dedications to Theos Hypsistos, not mentioning the synklitai, see IG X.2.1 67, 71, and 72.

XIII. EVALUATION

i. Private association

Certain

Note

There are no doubts about the private nature of the association, despite the uncertainty of its relation to the cult of the Egyptian Gods.
